

Investing in the Transformation to an Equitable and Ecologically Sound Regional Food System

STACEY FAELLA

Stacey Faella is the Executive Director of the Woodcock Foundation, a progressive family foundation that supports efforts to improve the educational, economic, and environmental circumstances of communities in need. Stacey works across the foundation's programs, which span social enterprise, food systems, large landscape conservation, gender equality, media reform, and civil society. In addition to advancing the foundation's programs, Stacey works with others to foster collaboration in philanthropy and support nonprofit capacity building efforts. She originally joined the foundation in September 2011.

Stacey has experience working on foundation and nonprofit communications, strategy, and evaluation, including the development of a foundation project strategy to build millennial engagement in gender equality causes and a program evaluation for an international youth program of Planned Parenthood. She has engaged in communications research on behalf of various causes and recently organized a program to improve grantee communications capacity in the areas of earned media and social media. Stacey serves on the Board of the League of Women Voters of New Jersey, where she was also founding chair of the Young People's Network.
